National, Global, or Neoliberal Suburb?

Jeff Derksen
The golden cultural promise of globalization, back when promises were cultural and not merely economic, was that the dynamics of cultural flows and interchange would propagate hybrid cultures and multicultural robustness strong enough to interlace the local into the global without a homogenization of local cultures and strong enough to shape the approaching global culture toward heterogeneity.